

A Talk by Dr Matt Morgan on:
'Nye at 75 : Behind the Hospital Curtain, Working in and Writing about the NHS'

Matt Morgan is a Consultant in Intensive Care Medicine, adjunct Clinical Professor and regular BMJ columnist. He has contributed to over 50 scientific articles following his PhD in artificial intelligence including NEJM (the New England Journal of Medicine,) Lancet and JAMA (Journal of the American Medical Association.) After appearing on television and radio, he gave the 2023 Woodridge Lecture and was nominated for the Royal Society's David Attenborough prize for public engagement. His first book, 'CRITICAL', tells remarkable stories of patients in the intensive care unit. His second book, ONE MEDICINE, explores how understanding animals can help treat human disease. His third book will look at the lives of patients after surviving a cardiac arrest. He is a member of the BMJ Commission on the Future of the NHS and is the medical advisor for The National Theatre in London's production of 'Nye', the story of Aneurin Bevan. He lives in Cardiff with his family.

A combination of careful planning and good luck has allowed us to hear Dr Matt Morgan's talk before the arrival from London of the play "Nye", with Michael Sheen, to Cardiff, WMC. During its production at the National Theatre, Dr Morgan's role was that of medical advisor. He also contributed to the writing of the script and advised on props and movement on stage. His talk today will demonstrate how a medical education can lead to involvement with a broad spectrum of activities quite outside the generally accepted role of the physician.
